It's similar to Photoshop with a few key differences: * Lightroom is designed for photographers. Its main use is to show a picture-based collection of images on a computer monitor. Lightroom features an image browser that allows you to view all the images in the order that they were created, so you can decide which ones to keep and which to discard. * Lightroom is a standalone program. Unlike Photoshop, which incorporates everything you do into the same interface, Lightroom is designed to be viewed separately from the operating system. After you edit images in Lightroom, you can export them as images, videos, or some other media format. * Lightroom is a work in progress. Its latest iteration is version 4. If you already have an earlier version, you can update to Lightroom 4 using one of these two methods: * If you have a product activation disc for earlier versions of Lightroom, insert that disc and follow the instructions provided by Adobe to update your existing version to version 4. * Install version 4.0, the latest version, and update your _.llf_ file to the most recent version (available on the Lightroom website) to update your old version to version 4. For more information about Lightroom, visit www.lightroom.adobe.com. * You need to download additional software to use the following additional features: * Video tools * Image-style features, which allow you to tweak the look of the image and make it appear more polished, as you'd do in a magazine * Document, which enables you to create slide shows with variable transitions and audio narration * Print features, which allow you to customize the look and feel of the print version of the image. To be more precise, when I access the app with the localhost, I can read all the data from Azure storage but when I access it through the web browser with the application's IP, I can only read data from my Azure Storage, and all the other calls in the application are forbidden (Example: Get user info, Get Comments, etc.). When I change the authentication provider to use my local token (in the "Web API" --> "Settings" --> "Authentication" tab --> "Add" button and typing something in the box), I get the following error (404) in the browser that says: The request was forbidden with client authentication scheme 'Bearer'. The request is invalid because it does not contain a 'client_id' header with an active 'Bearer

The present invention relates generally to pressure control valves and to a method of manufacturing such a valve, and is more particularly directed to a new and improved mechanism for mounting the valve to the flow line, such as the supply line to a hydraulic motor, and which permits a quick and ready method of assembling the valve in place, and which provides a valve which will function with minimal leakage from the pressure fluid. Hydraulic valves are well known in the art and are widely utilized for control of a wide range of hydraulic applications. Valves of the type to which this invention is directed are used to regulate the flow of fluid to a hydraulic motor. The ability of the valve to supply sufficient fluid to the motor, while at the same time being able to provide a specific pressure in a preselected quantity, is an important factor in the successful control of the hydraulic system. A hydraulic valve may be used to control the hydraulic fluid supply to the motor, to control the motor brake or to control the speed of the hydraulic motor. In all of these applications, it is important that the valve function as required and provide a high degree of accuracy and efficiency in its operations. One problem associated with hydraulic valves is the leakage from the pressure fluid in the valve itself, which may be referred to as "registration leakage." This leakage is caused by minute leaks in the components of the valve, including the valve body, valve spool or butterfly valve, the rotating parts such as springs or the like which are utilized to move the valve spool to the desired position. Even though the desired sealing surfaces are properly assembled, registration leakage will occur in the absence of a special seal arrangement. Because of the difficulties involved in obtaining high quality seals in hydraulic valves, a common practice is to use elastomeric seals. For example, the exterior of the valve body may be provided with an elastomeric lip which engages an interior portion of the valve spool or butterfly valve. This permits a greater tolerance of the mating parts, and consequently reduces registration leakage. However, it is well known that, once the elastomeric seal is sealed to the valve body, that seal will only perform to its maximum acceptable level. As time and usage allow the elastomeric seal to wear down, leakage will result and the valve will not function as it should. As a result, it has become common practice to regularly replace the elastomeric seal and/or seat, or other sealing members, on hydraulic valves. This is both time consuming and costly.
