Change Y!M Status helps you change the status of Yahoo! Messenger on Windows XP, Vista, Windows 7 and 8. Yahoo! Messenger actually uses the bmp icon format for changing statuses, it's a 32x32 bitmap file without additional information. But today its is recommended to use PNG files instead of the classic BMP. To change your status you can use the following options: "Idle" to be "Busy", "Plugin" to be "Plugged In", "Headphones" to be "In a Meeting", "Open Talk" to be "In an IM Conversation" or "Webcam" to be "Online for Skype" It is quite useful and simple to use. However, I feel that this needs to be updated and brought to its original existng level. It still needs some work. I'm sure this is just a start, but even with just what I have seen, I know it has potential. Version 2.0 has some minor issues with the user interface of the software. It would be highly recommended to have a look at the program and determine whether it should be put in a review. - Help file: In this tutorial we will show you how to make a clock that will play a chime every time it has 5 minutes to go. We will use FreeSWITCH VoIP software and an Xilinx Zynq-7020 to make the project. This particular clock is a DIY project that you could scale and create for your own chime system. It is perfect to be used on a PC, Raspberry Pi or other small embedded system. The project of the "Chime Clock" will take approximately 30 minutes to complete, but we will explain every single step so you can complete it even faster. The default interface for the Xilinx Zynq-7020 is C-code and we will translate it to C++ because FreeSWITCH software is running on C++. We have kept the project simple and our goal is to build a simple analog clock that will be a chime every time it has 5 minutes to go. If you have programmed Arduino before, you will understand the project with much less steps because it is quite similar. There will be three components in the project: • The Xilinx Zynq-7020 • The "Chime Clock" • FreeSWITCH The Xilinx Zynq-7020 is an embedded platform that we can program in C, C++ or even higher level languages. It is also known as the Zynq7000, as a reference to the Zynq7000 family of the Xilinx Zynq UltraScale+ The "Chime Clock" is a standalone project but will require hardware to run. It will require a microphone, speaker and a power supply. FreeSWITCH VoIP software will run on the Xilinx Zynq-7020 as well, and can be downloaded from the FreeSWITCH website, along with the example "Simple Chime Example". We hope this tutorial will help you learn how to build your own "Chime Clock" project and will look at some of the work that goes into the components. Thanks for watching!

Software Required: FreeSWITCH VoIP software and Xilinx Zyn

System Requirements For Change Y!M Status:

Windows XP/Vista/7/8 The game is Windows XP compatible. It will run on Windows 7 as well. However, it is possible to change some settings, so it may look different in Windows 7. The game requires an OpenGL-based GPU. This means the latest DirectX is needed. It also requires a multi-core CPU. We recommend the following graphic card: Nvidia GeForce 7800 or Radeon HD 4800 CPU: Core 2 Quad or Pentium 4 Memory: At least 4
